

Mechanical Sciences

Mechanical Sciences indexed in Science Citation Index Expanded

Thomson Reuters has announced that they will include Mechanical Sciences (MS) in their Web of Science/ISI listings following the completion of their assessment of the quality, characteristics, and flow of papers published in the journal since its launch in 2010. This is terrific news and represents the tremendous work of the editorial board, the publisher, and, more importantly, the trust of the scientific community to submit articles of top quality to MS. Thomson Reuters will include all issues of MS in their databases. Once again, we would like to thank all authors, referees, and the editorial team which have all made the journal to what it is today, and we hope you will contribute to its future impact.

It may take several weeks or even months until Thomson Reuters has processed all XML meta-data following the data transfer from Copernicus Publications.

MS Chief and Executive Editors
Just Herder, Nima Tolou, and Amin Barari

